The United States International Gambling™ Report Series is the first academic collection to deal comprehensively with gambling. This special collection reprints many important government documents and academic source materials relevant to gambling issues. This collection includes the academic publications and government testimonies of several outstanding professors and government officials.

As important source documents on gambling issues began to disappear with the advent of the 21st Century, the goals of this special collection are to bring together, republish, and disseminate academic articles and government reports which:

- Added significantly to the literature on gambling's economic, social, and government impacts
- Were leading-edge publications when they were produced
- Significantly changed the direction of the academic research or influenced government policies

This series is made up of three books:

- Gambling: Executive Summaries and Recommendations
- Gambling with National Security, Terrorism, and Military Readiness
- Gambling with Crime, Destabilized Economies, and Financial Systems.

Each volume includes the Recommendations of the 1999 U.S. National Gambling Impact Study Commission (NGISC) and observations by Chair Kay C. James and other academic experts. Similarly, every volume contains multiple source materials and citations for the pronouncements on gambling by news media icons such as Walter Cronkite and by social leaders such as Jesse Jackson, as well as by U.S. Presidents, international leaders, governors, and state and Federal legislators.

Gambling: Executive Summaries and Recommendations

Reprinting and emulating the Recommendations of the 1999 National Gambling Impact Study Commission, this book lists new and updated executive summaries and recommendations relating to U.S.-international gambling, as well as American Indian gambling.

An extensive "Introduction" to gambling issues provides an easy to use, but well-documented, synopsis for each of the many issues in decriminalizing organized gambling, including:

- The new Russian ban on 2,230 casinos
- Internet gambling
- The gambling drain on the economy and its net negative impact on job creation
- Addicted gambling and suicides
- Gambling-caused increases in bankruptcies, crime, and prostitution
- Gambling's $3 in taxpayer costs for every $1 in benefits

These concerns are exemplified by the reprinted press release and news account: 40 Economists Side Against More Gambling. The conclusion is that the debate on gambling's costs/benefits is over – the costs overwhelm any benefits.

Gambling with National Security, Terrorism, and Military Readiness

This book details authoritative source materials and accompanying historical commentaries documenting the impacts of gambling on U.S. and international security issues, including terrorism issues and military readiness concerns.

U.S. Presidential correspondence, as well as U.S. Congressional hearings and statements, are printed in this volume – some for the first time – including the pivotal communiqués which led to the enactment of the 1996 U.S. Gambling Commission, the 2006 Unlawful Internet Gambling Enforcement Act (UIGEA), and various laws impacting American Indians.

Reprinted items include Warren Buffett's insights on the overall negative socioeconomic impacts of legalized gambling. Highlighted is the definitive study on increased crime caused by gambling, which was authored by Professors Earl Grinols and David Mustard (and originally published by Harvard and MIT). Also reproduced are testimonies by well-known officials of the National Coalition Against Legalized Gambling (NCALG), including Tom Grey on socioeconomic issues and Dianne Berlin on consumer protection issues and corruption. Analyses of gambling issues cross the spectrum from the Department of Homeland Security, the Department of Defense, and military personnel – to the Citizens Equal Rights Alliance (CERA), Stop Predatory Gambling, and One Nation United (ONU).

Gambling with Crime, Destabilized Economies, and Financial Systems

In this volume, historical comments and reprinted government source materials document the predictable negative socioeconomic impacts of decriminalized organized gambling on U.S. and international economies and destabilized financial systems.

One important historical document is the reprinted analysis of gambling's negative impacts on job creation, which was presented to the Federal Reserve Bank of Boston. Furthermore, this volume has sample templates for economic analyses involving gambling, as exemplified by one produced by Wichita State University. Historical documents also include the 2007 Canadian Investigation into the Ontario Lottery and Gaming Corporation's Protection of the Public from Fraud and Theft, as well as the 1999 Final Report Summary of the Australian Productivity Commission, which paralleled the 1999 U.S. NGISC Final Report. Reprinted analyses and position papers include those by the National Association of Attorneys General (NAAG), former NGISC Executive Director Timothy Kelly, the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, and the Program in Arms Control, Disarmament, and International Security (ACDIS).
